he filling of a merchants lien-in Eri

County against all of the buildings of the Exposition.

The suit has been started by the Mayo and Rohrer Company, dealers in electrical supplies. The company is accommanted by copies of numerous letters which show that the Exposition has not been a financial success.

On July 17 a letter was received by the electrical supply concern in which a cash payment of 15 per cent, was offered and a note for the balance on four months' time. This offer was refused and the suit begun.

The Exposition officials explain that the cash receipts from admissions and concessions are turned over to the bankers who guaranteed the $2,500,000 of bonds issued by the Exposition Company and add that no funds were available to pay anything except actual running expenses. The material furnished by Mayo & Roher was used in construction work.

BALLET GIRL SUES HER AGED SUITOR FOR $50,000.

Ella Lange, Only Twen- 8 ty-four, Says She Learned to Love Wealthy Rudolph Hilbrand, Who Was Married, but She Didn't Know It.

"Of course he asked me to marry him. He treated me like a queen for three years and I loved him, though he was denies my suit to recover $50,000 for breach of promise, but he'll know he's been sued before I get through with of age, and lives with her mother at No. 226 West Fourth street. Ella has golden hair and a face nice to look upon. As for her figure-well, she got a job on the strength of that.

Miss Lange referred to Rudolph Hil-brand, a wealthy cabinetmaker, who has a wife and family at No. 136 East Sixteenth street. The service of the complaint marks the ending of an affection that swayed the hearts for three years of the sixty-five-year-old suitor and his young charmer.

He admits giving the young woman money and jewels. But he admits no promises.

Ella, a few days ago, walked into the Metropolitan Opera-House while the rehearsals of "Ladies of Paradise" was progressing and said she preferred work to idleners. There were diamonds as large as hazel nuts under the waving blond tresses and jewels of size and varied dimensions on other parts of her person.

varied dimensions on other parts of her person.

"Because I am suing a man for breach of promise it is no reason why I should remain idle, and I'm going to get the money anyway," said Ella. "Yes, I have been on the stage; spent three years at it. Ballet is my speciality, but I admit I can carry a spear, and in the ilrst rank, too.

"If I were to hang around waiting for that $50,000 to fall into my lap, I'll admit my expenses would be more than I cared to distribute. Mr. Hilbrand asked me to marry him, and we were to of course. That seems the only solution of this annual problem of overcrowding. Even so, we cannot take care of nearly all who apply."

A little girl applied to Miss Broderick on her way from the Lexington avenue school yesterday, running up to her on the street with:

"If I can't get in this time I can't never come. I was kept out last year, and Uncle says I have to go to work when I'm twelve. I ain't got much time. Do you think you kin get me in?"

Miss Beck, in the same school, had a present yesterday of some battered looking flowers, with the printed inscription:

tion:
"For our teacher. Ain't you going to be our teacher?"
The spelling was uncertain and the whole outlay was from three who had been sent home schoolless the night be-

been sent home schoolless the night before.

The parents of the children who are turned away, it may be only temporarrarily, are the most excited of all at the yearly proposition, now new to them. In front of the East Sixty-third street school yesterday several indignant mothers who lived near were going over the idea together, while their offspring, for whom there was no room in the school looked on and fought about who had the first chance to get in.

"What," said the most muscular of the mothers defiantly, "i'd be the use of payin' taxes if we hed anythin' to tax? That's what I'm wantin' to hev set right."

least he more practically suggests remedies, though he is not very hopeful that they will be fruitful this year.

"To begin with." sald Supt. Maxwell, "this overcrowding will have quite adjusted itself by the middle of October. Before a hasty opinion of the inefficiency of the system is formed, because of the inability to register all first and second day applicants, it ought to be remembered that a good many thousands of these will inevitably drop out by the middle or end of October, and certainly by Christmas. The state of affairs is, on this account, not nearly so bad as it looks. By Nov. I there is usually room enough in the schools, though the overcrowding is regular in September.

still, Much Room In Needed. "However, it remains true that, even so, more room is needed both for those who stay on and for those whose staying could be encouraged were more attention possible to each pupil. Looked at in its best light, a good deal more room is needed, and needed badly, in the public schools of New York.

"What would I suggest as a remedy?" repeated Supt. Maxwell. "Well, I would suggest two measures, one of which has a strong objection to it, and the other of which has been attempted for the past three years without suc-

"I would suggest first the renting of buildings to take care of the kindergarten and lower primary pupils. If the room in the school buildings occupied by these large classes were left DR, EDWARD KOCH Has Rewas, it would go a long way toward accommodating the pupils who are now being turned away.
"This could be done at comparatively small expense, but there is, of course one objection to it:

"All the buildings that it would b possible to rent are not fireproof. This at present precludes this remedy, but the fire laws could be modified by act of the Legislature to include these buildings not fireproof, while taking ample precautions for the safety of pupils sent

The second remedy I would suggest is of course more vital, and fills the real need. This is to secure from the Legislature an annual appropriation, Legislature an annual appropriation, the amount of which should be based on the exact proportion of increase every year in the school population of New York.

"Certainly this proportion can be fixed. It is practically known now.

"Thirty-five thousand new children apply every year for admission to the schools of New York.

"I wouldn't say," said Supt. William H. Maxwell, of the New York City schools, "that it's the fault of the New York City schools, "that it's the fault of the eity."

He had been asked by an Evening World reporter where lies the blame that 10,000 children were turned away from the public schools of New York yesterday when they attempted to register their applications for free instruction this Fall and Winter.

"Is it the fault of the schools, then?" he was asked.
"I wouldn't say either," went on Supt. Maxwell, "that it's the fault of the schools. In fact, I am not prepared at this time to attach the blame to anyone."

"But you admit the condition. Some one must be at fault, ther."
"I admitt," returned Supt. Maxwell, "that a larse number of children cament be admitted to the schools, it not. I move the schools when they attempted to the schools when they attempted to the schools in the fault of the schools. In fact, I am not prepared at this time to attach the blame to anyone."
"I admitt," returned Supt. Maxwell, "there is one thing that can be done, and its done not be admitted to the schools, I then to work the schools, I for the schools in the schools, I for the schools,
